

Nicolò Amati 1650

The ribs and scroll are made of wood similar to the back. The top is made from two pieces of spruce of medium width grain in the centre which opens slightly towards the sides. The varnish is of a golden brown colour. This violin is a fine and characteristic example of the maker's work, currently in a very good state of preservation.